The purpose of this consultation

In August 2015, the Commission published a "Roadmap" for the initiative 'A new start to address the challenges of work-life balance faced by working families' to replace the 2008 Commission proposal to revise the Maternity Leave Directive[1]. The objective for this initiative is to increase the participation of women in the labour market by modernising and adapting the current EU legal and policy framework to today's labour market to allow for parents with children and/or dependent relatives to better balance family and work life, allow for a greater sharing of care responsibilities between women and men, and to strengthen gender equality in the labour market.

In line with Article 154(2) TFEU, the Commission has launched the first stage consultation with the European social partners to obtain their views on the possible direction of European Union action, in particular on legislative measures concerning family leaves and flexible working arrangements that could address these challenges. In accordance with Article 155 TFEU, during the first stage consultation social partners may inform the Commission on their wish to initiate a negotiation process for a social partner's agreement. In such a case, the Commission suspends its initiative for the duration of the negotiations. If these are successfully concluded, social partners may request their agreement be implemented by the Commission presenting a proposal for a Council Decision.

Legislative and policy measures can be complementary elements in a package in order to improve work-life balance. Therefore the roadmap also outlines possible non-legislative options for the way forward, including comprehensive policy guidance to Member States in the area of work-life balance, as well as reinforced monitoring, better use of EU funds and knowledge-sharing activities.

The purpose of this consultation is to gather views on the development and implementation of a range of possible tools at EU-level to support work-life balance.

Most of existing policy measures supporting the reconciliation work and family are constructed for the classical family type (mother, father, child). Instead, it is essential considering the diversity of families and family life and thus providing different measures for the diversity of all families. E.g. a greater recognition and active support for single parents is essential as well as for families having more than two children.

Furthermore, care for dependent relatives is a crucial issue. Caring for a dependent person means an incisive change in the life of the caregiver. Long-term care is proceeding more unpredictable than child care which automatically is flanked by institutional transitions (e.g. early education and care, school). The triple burden of work, family and long-term care for dependent relatives might strain the caregiver's health, which is a relevant risk especially for women who still take most of the responsibility for elderly care. A broad offer of home care as well as available support and supply of (psychological) counselling centers for the caregiver is needed.
